PRESIDENT'S NOTES:

We are less than a few weeks from WWK so please get out to your vendors, dealers and/or friends and get those door prizes.

Just want to remind everyone that this year is an International Election year. You should have received your ballots in the mail by now. Please do not just throw them away. I ask you to vote for one of the candidates. Put and mark by the name you vote for even if they are unopposed there must be a mark or the vote does not count. If you do not know any of the candidates you can check on the International Website for their background. Also you can read the WV State Reps Report about who the Mason Dixon Conference Board and chapter presidents voted to endorse for the election. You could just follow their advised. It is up to you but please vote and send your ballots back in.

Also this fall our chapter will be having elections for the next two years (2016-2017). If you are thinking or wanting to run for office please let us know so we can get the information out to all the members. Also if you absolutely do not want to run for an office please let us know. We must have at least six (6) officers. The office of Secretary and Treasurer can be held by one person. If we have separate officers for those offices then we will have seven (7). Remember this is your chapter so please help keep it moving forward.

VICE PRESIDENTS NOTES:

Our next meeting will be Thursday evening, July 9th, 2015, at 19:00 hours, Gino's Pizza, 16 Davis Ave, Elkins, WV 26241.

Remember that if a couple of you are just going to do a ride for a couple hours or a group ride to work please call or email one of the board members so we can get you listed as a group/chapter ride event. You need to have at least one event attended in the year to keep you status for membership under the new bylaws. That means any Blue Knight event anywhere, a chapter group ride like two or more members riding their bikes to work and back, taking a short ride for an hour or so. If you have time to call several members that is great if not and it is just a couple of you that is fine. You must notify one of the board members to get it noted as an official ride.

Adding A Passenger

After 6 months of experience you are still NOT ready

By: James R. Davis

Passengers and new riders are a NO NO. But you know that, I'm sure. So let's talk about the real issues.

When you move from a smaller bike to a larger bike the learning curve essentially starts all over again. You will need to practice starts, stops, turns almost as if you had never ridden a bike before. However, moving from a larger bike to a smaller one takes about 1 minute of familiarity and you will have complete control of it (unless you make a radical move from a cruiser to a sport bike, for example.) But what I was reaching for here was the effect of added weight.

It is NOT true that adding weight to a bike increases stopping distance and time - it merely makes it more difficult to achieve the same stopping distance and time but because traction is increased proportionate to the added weight, you have the traction to handle more braking - so all you have to do is squeeze the brakes harder to get the same distance and time.

That is, adding a passenger changes the dynamics of the bike and a new rider barely has control of the dynamics that existed before adding that passenger.

So, I recommend at least SIX MONTHS of experience riding your bike before you allow a passenger to get onto it. But at that time you will still NOT BE READY to handle the added weight!!!! You will need to practice with that added weight before you go out and test other limits.

Further, that FIRST passenger should NOT be your significant other or a child!!!! It should be an experienced rider. An experienced rider will completely understand ragged starts, less than smooth stops and some insecurity leaning the bike. He/she will NOT add problems by being distracting or other unsafe behavior behind you. Your significant other, on the other hand, will expect you to be in CONTROL of the bike and when you demonstrate sloppy starts/stops and leans you will undermine that confidence.

With a passenger you want to PRACTICE, practice, practice - just like when you graduate to a new/larger bike. I cannot remember an inexperienced passenger who would have tolerated such practice sessions. So get a friend and help each other out with that practice before you subject an uninformed person to your learning curve.

Finally, if your significant other is going to be a regular passenger, even if she never intends to drive a motorcycle, have her take the MSF class. Honest! A passenger is NOT totally dependent upon the rider for his/her safety. Should you need help (heart attack, for example) your passenger can take control of the bike from the pillion and get it off the road safely from the pillion!!! (If trained.)

From Membership

A word about deer. One of the attractions of this area was the abundance of good eating on the hoof. I am now quickly learning that it’s not ALL good. I had our car out of the shop not a week after an argument with a guardrail when a deer stepped out in front of herself and Whammo! Did you know that these new aluminum hoods run about $3,500.00 painted and installed? And then we come to the motorcycle. My bike is finally done and home, and I have been taking it to town two and three times a week. I go down 18 (newly resurfaced!) to 47, 47 to 33, 33 to 19 and 19 into town. It takes me a couple of hours, but it’s about the ride, not the destination, and I LOVE biking on 19! I digress – I have driven through a flock of turkey buzzards that just did not want to move ( the rotting carcass was apparently just too yummy!) scared the crap out of a couple of idiots with the air horn ( I recommend one!) who wanted to pull out in front of me, and swam home Monday through a deluge. But the scariest things out there are the deer. If I see them in time, the air horn works wonders, but twice now I have had to pull over and calm myself. Both times, the deer was crossing the road, and I assumed that was it, when they did a 180 right back into the roadway! The new bike configuration now has two brakes, and not just one, and that’s what saved the day. But I no longer take advantage of the neat twists and turns on the new black top on 18 – I drive like a little old lady in her Model T – and my head is always moving. These are the things they teach you to do – but until you know why, sometimes the lessons don’t really take. Believe me, it’s necessary!
