Target Fixation

Rather than let it lead you into trouble, use it

By: James R. Davis

Sometimes we riders tend to minimize the risks we hear about. Take, for example, what every student of the Motorcycle Safety Foundation has heard about - 'target fixation'. 'Fixating' on something means not being able to take your attention (your eyes, for example) away from it. In the case of riding motorcycles, for example, this leads to the phenomena wherein our motorcycles tend to go in the direction we are looking and is usually described with an example familiar to all -- that if you see a pothole in the street ahead of you and don't take your eyes off it you are likely to hit it.

While that is true, it is too trivial an example to get our attention appropriately. We are left with the opinion that 'target fixation' is of trivial concern because we all know that we can, if we try, avoid that pothole.

In the case study we talk at great length about the tragic consequences possible from thinking that target fixation is a trivial problem. You are strongly encouraged to read that case study. While it is more graphic than most will be comfortable with, I can think of nothing that will better make the case for respecting the danger of target fixation.

It is insufficient to simply post the advise that you should avoid target fixation. Saying "don't fixate" is all very well, but once it starts, you need a positive technique to get yourself out in one piece. So once you are in trouble, use target fixation to save your skin.

Don't look at the oncoming truck/tree/pothole; figure out where you would rather be and fixate on that instead. In fact, those of you that have taken the MSF classes know that "target fixation" is an excellent way to control skids - fixate on a point dead ahead on the horizon, and you'll be well on the way towards automatically correcting most skids.

Committee Reports

Ed Martin, 2016 WWK Committee Chairman: Walter and I went back to Elkins to talk with all parties involved with our event and everything is looking good for another event next year. Since this was the first year working with all these people everyone now knows what to expect and we are keeping our fingers crossed that all of them will be on board with help again next year. We understand that we had a few incidents happen, they were not major incidents and all parties with the planning stages were very happy.

Brother Knight and Brother Martin have talked to the downtown group and they are wanting us back next year and so does the American Legion. The hotel manager was happy with our group as well and is looking forward to our return. At the July meeting it was the consciences of the members that we have the 2017 Wild Wonderful Knights Weekend back at the same hotel in Elkins. Brother Knight and Brother Martin will be checking with the Elkins people to see if we can make it happen.
